A&E Biography (Series) - Film and stage actress, born in Stockholm, Sweden. After studying at the Royal Dramatic Theatre, she made her film debut in Munkbrogreven (1934). Unaffected and vivacious, she became an immensely popular romantic star in such films as Casablanca (1942), Spellbound (1945), and Notorious (1946). In 1950 she gave birth to the illegitimate child of director Roberto Rossellini. The ensuing scandal led to her ostracization from the US film industry. She continued her career in Europe, and was welcomed back by Hollywood on her return in 1956. Nominated seven times for an Academy Award, she won Oscars for Gaslight (1944), Anastasia (1956), and Murder on the Orient Express (1974).

This exhilarating film shows celebrated stage director/choreographer, Brian Macdonald rehearsing Canada's premier operetta company in three Gilbert and Sullivan comic operettas: "The Mikado", "The Gondoliers", and "Iolanthe". Company members, who are trained actors and/or singers, must not only learn to dance, but also have to step lively to keep pace. The video includes highlights from the performances of all three productions, as well as scenes from a gala performance at London's refurbished Old Vic. All the hard work, sweat and repetition to produce the onstage magic is made abundantly clear.
